Community Message

At Scadding Court Community Centre our work is focused on making this community a better place to be, and on collaborating with and supporting others who want to do the same. We do this through recreation; social programming; settlement services; creating opportunities for education, work, play and volunteering; supporting community groups, special events and much more. At the heart of all of our activities lies the hope and belief that it is possible to create social, economic and cultural conditions that give everyone an equal chance of health and success.

Over time, it has become more and more obvious that most issues are multi-layered and have individual, community-wide as well as societal / systemic dimensions. For this reason Scadding Court is committed to being active on different levels. This means that instead of just providing direct services and programs, we also strive to build community capacity and support individuals and groups in the community that are working toward "big picture" social change. Much of that work is happening around the issues of discrimination, racism and social exclusion.

SCCC food access and security activities provide healthy, affordable and appropriate food, build skills, educate people and create social networks and provide a base from which we can host events and bring forward community perspectives to decision-makers. Our School Readiness program prepares newcomer children and their families for the Canadian school system and increases awareness among teachers and schools for the issues that many newcomers face, many of which relate to their ability to be fully included in academic and extracurricular activities. Investing in our Diversity scholarships financially reward young people for their work in anti-racism/anti-discrimination work, which in turn benefits their communities and raises awareness about racism, discrimination and diversity among supporters, which include institutions, corporations, banks and politicians.

Our settlement services assist newcomers in adapting to and integrating into life in Canada. Because we recognize that SCCC is not able to meet all of their needs, we joined seven other west end service providers to form the Settlement Services Access Group (SSAG), which aims to find ways to increase access to existing and new services for newcomers across our shared communities. SCCC's unique Emergency and Occasional Childcare program provides respite care, child care and support to many community members and serves as an example to decision-makers of what child care can and should be – high quality, accessible, flexible and affordable.

Along with providing programs, services and a supportive and comfortable place to be, at SCCC we understand that community centres have a role to play in facilitating, supporting, participating in and even initiating activities that will contribute to social change. As we move into the future, we will continue to engage community members and partners in helping us to identify ways to bring different levels of activity together. The SCCC Board, staff and volunteers are committed not only to listen but to hear what community members want and need, and to working with you to achieve those goals. To that end we invite and encourage you to approach us at any time with your hopes, visions and dreams for this community and for the society in which we all live together.

Program Highlights

SCCC Greenhouse Café

After months of renovation, the Café opened for business in April 2006 with a focus on providing high quality, affordable and tasty food. Operating with a community economic development model, it also serves as a training and employment opportunity for local youth. The Café also supports SCCC's efforts to address food security issues in the community by making nutritious snacks and meals for many programs and events at the Centre. Together, these activities along with catering for other organizations and groups make the Café a pretty busy place. Its activities and the people it draws to the Centre are also a great addition to the atmosphere in the SCCC lobby.

Community Education & Access to Police Complaints (CEAPC) Project

SCCC and 38 partner organizations from across Toronto continued to provide support to individuals in filing complaints with the police and to educate individuals, groups and the public at large about the complaints process and related issues through a TTC campaign, multi-lingual brochures and workshops.

This year, CEAPC added to these activities by working to help to create a better complaints system. A very detailed analysis of the provincial government's proposed new police complaints legislation was developed and presented to them along with 50 specific recommendations for a stronger, more effective complaints system.

Parenting 1234

This is an early intervention program that helps teenage and young mothers build their capacity to parent their children. Much of the program is focused on learning about and building parenting skills, however over time it has become clear that learning how to identify and address other issues in their lives that impact on parenting is equally important. These issues include housing, employment, education, violence and health.

In 2006 the program reduced the number of workshops and educational sessions to include summer sessions that emphasized fun, interactive activities for families that were enjoyed by all. Over the course of the year the group also focused on developing personal goals and building skills for self-advocacy. Journals, role playing and other techniques were used to learn how to identify problems and opportunities, gather info, speak up for yourself and solve problems.

Feedback from participants rates this as a very popular and effective program that provides a wide range of important opportunities for learning, skill-building, social networking and support.

Investing in our Diversity Scholarship

Investing In Our Diversity Scholarship Awards profile the exciting, important and innovative work of young community leaders in anti-racism and diversity. At the same time they increase access to post-secondary training or education for youth from marginalized communities. To date, the program has raised over $150,000 and assisted 48 youth to attend post-secondary education or apprenticeships.

Over 300 community and business leaders, politicians, lawyers and media personalities attended the 2006 annual awards dinner at which eight $4000 scholarships (for a total of $32,000) were awarded to graduating high school students from the SCCC catchment area and the Toronto Community Housing communities of Regent Park, Pelham Park/Symington Place and Lawrence Heights.

By maintaining a focus on focusing on young people doing anti-racism work in their schools and community, SCCC acknowledges the commitment of a new generation of leaders whose passion and enthusiasm will in turn impact positively on their communities.
